When planning our third edition of "Christmas In Baldwin County," we decided to tap into the vibrant energy of our public schools and feature the talents of its student choirs. We weren't disappointed.

In all, 11 school choirs and two more comprised of teachers responded to our invitation. The students ranged from third graders to graduating seniors. They eagerly arrived on two days in May to record holiday songs they had obviously practiced very hard at mastering. None were intimidated by the sound engineers and bevy of microphones. They simply marched into the studio and sang from their hearts.

There are always a number of people to thank when taking on a project of this magnitude. Certainly, special appreciation should be given to Dr. Faron Hollinger, Superintendent of the Baldwin County School System and members of his central office including Wendy Morgan, Kathy Nichol and Sam Watson. In addition, we'd like to thank Craig Stringfield of First Baptist Church in Gulf Shores and Buddy Brock of Faulkner State Community College for allowing us to record at their beautiful facilities.

Also, we appreciate the effort of our narrators who interrupted their very busy schedules to record "Twas the Night Before Christmas".

But a rousing ovation should be given to the school music directors and students who agreed to lend their voices to help those less fortunate this Christmas season. Their generosity and compassion is only overshadowed by their gift of music.

Sincerely,

E. A. "Bucky" Jakins, Jr.
